Dear Subscriber,

Coronavirus outbreak & your subscription

During these unprecedented times we remain committed to delivering your newspaper and wanted to let you know that at present we are maintaining distribution in all of our regions.

We continue to follow and monitor official government advice and want to reassure you that should there be a change in the service we are able to offer due to enforced restrictions or any other reason we will let you know.

The World Health Organisation has declared it safe to receive parcels and packages during the pandemic and coronavirus is very unlikely to be transmitted through newspapers due to the sterile nature of the printing process.

The health and well-being of our printers and distributors is paramount and we have taken steps to ensure they remain safe and follow strict hygiene guidelines. Please accept our apologies if we deliver a little later than usual, we are asking drivers in addition to wearing gloves that they take time to sanitise regularly during the delivery operation.

We are aware that there may be a temporary change to your own circumstances, such as changing your delivery address or the need to suspend delivery for a short while. As a reminder, you can do this by visiting and logging into your online account. And, in the event that distribution becomes problematic, we are preparing digital alternatives so you can continue to receive your FT edition.

Thank you for your continued support and please take care of yourself and one another.

The Financial Times